The Postgraduate Diploma in Health Management is offered by the School of Public Health & Family Medicine. This dedicated health leadership and management programme has a highly reputable track-record, with over 200 alumni working at different levels and positions in the public sector health system.

This programme offers innovative perspectives and approaches for those who will be leading health system change towards universal health coverage. It addresses the politics of priority setting and organisational change and priority setting at every level of the health system, recognising that policy implementation and system change always requires leadership that stretches from the periphery to the centre. Given the importance of teams in every health setting, it requires participants to work with their teams in innovative workplace based activities, to consolidate learning and enhance overall workplace capacity.

The Diploma comprises 4 sequenced and inter-related courses that draw from the interdisciplinary fields of health systems, health policy analysis, health economics, and public management, and will require sustained engagement with workplace settings, and will benefit: • current and aspiring health managers, who may be working in generalist or clinical management roles, at any level of the health system • those working inside, or with, the public sector, in South Africa or from other African countries, and who have a commitment to creating public value and to life-long learning • teams of managers from particular settings.
